

The Future of Disasters in a Globalizing World

A conference sponsored by

The Rutgers Geography Department

April 21-22, 2006

University Inn, New Brunswick, NJ

Greg Bankoff, University of Auckland
Stephen Bender, Organization of American States
Monalisa Chatterjee, Rutgers University
Lee Clarke, Rutgers University
Craig Colten, Louisiana State University
Emily Gilbert, University of Toronto
Kerry R. Hinds, Independent scholar
Robin Leichenko, Rutgers University

Richard Little, University of Southern California
James K. Mitchell, Rutgers University
Karen O'Brien, University of Oslo
Karen M. O'Neill, Rutgers University
E. L. Quarantelli, University of Delaware
Helen T. Sullivan, Rider University
I. R. Tenali, The George Washington University

Additional Information: <http://geography.rutgers.edu>

Co-sponsors: Mark MaGrann; Dean of Cook College;
 Office of the Executive Vice President for Academic Affairs;
 Dean of the Faculty of Arts & Sciences; The Graduate School-New Brunswick

insurance personal freedoms radiation possibilities/probabilities saturation news coverage globalization national sovereignty pandemic

animal vulnerability decline in tourism high profile disasters distorted perceptions of risk open borders uncertainties in the data blame